

The Earth keeps spinning, quiet and still
Our cradle since time, yet we've bent its will
We sow destruction where life once grew
A planet that holds us, but we bid it adieu

The Earth needs us not, yet we need it so
It nurtures our lives, the seeds we sow
We dream of the Mars where no life thrives
But here we destroy what keeps us alive

Forests are burning, the skies turn gray
Oceans are rising, washing dreams away
A barren world shaped by greed and disdain
Yet hope still lingers amidst the pain

The Earth needs us not, yet we need it so
It nurtures our lives, the seeds we sow
We dream of the Mars where no life thrives
But here we destroy what keeps us alive

When the rivers run dry and the winds lose their voice
Will we regret each careless choice
A spark of light, a fleeting chance
To rewrite our story, to change the dance

The whispers of nature, a plea in the breeze
Mountains are mourning, the ancient trees
We chase the stars, but forget our place
Turning beauty to dust in this fragile space

The Earth needs us not, yet we need it so
It nurtures our lives, the seeds we sow

We dream of the Mars where no life thrives
But here we destroy what keeps us alive

The Earth still calls, in its gentle tone
A reminder we're not here alone
Will we awaken before it's too late
The Earth's plea is ours to contemplate